2. Reuters. Women 'uniquely placed' to inspire climate action, mayors say. PARIS (Thomson Reuters Foundation) - Women's untapped communication skills make them "uniquely placed" to explain the damaging impacts of an overheating planet and spur climate action by the public, mayors said on Thursday. Sydney Lord Mayor Clover Moore said women had staying power. "Think of the women in your families - how determined they are to nurture relationships and how they follow through with everything," she said in an interview. "Now apply that to climate action: women just get the job done."

5. InterPressService. Taking the Lead in Fight Against Climate Change. Many delegates, however, highlighted the lack of national support for climate action by some male leaders, with Clover Moore, the Lord Mayor of Sydney, deploring the global effects of climate-sceptic governments. “We’re as devastated across the world by Trump as you are in the U.S.,” Moore said, referring to the U.S. president’s lack of support for the Paris Agreement on climate change, but she added that the prime minister of Australia was not “much better”. “It’s very depressing times, but we don’t despair ... we fully support our young community coming out and telling our national government to act responsibility. Full strength to our young communities.”
