**For consideration:

In light of the current economic climate and recent changes in NSW Government policy, including to ban no-reason evictions and the extension of the mandatory notice period to 90 days, it has become increasingly clear that build-to-rent developers can effectively address the pressing accommodation shortage. Despite the economic challenges and the fact that build-to-rent projects often incur losses due to average rental returns being roughly half of the standard mortgage rates, we as a developer, become pivotal in providing much-needed rental housing.

The build-to-rent model that we are proposing offers long-term, stable rental options, which align well with the new regulations aimed at enhancing tenant security. This model helps to contribute to supply of rental housing for over 2 million renters across NSW and ensure they have access to reliable and suitable housing. While the financial returns for build-to-rent developers may be lower compared to traditional property investments, our commitment is to help to address the critical gap in rental housing supply. Under this scheme, we have the ability to deliver high-quality, professionally managed rental properties that play a crucial role in mitigating the accommodation shortage, fostering a stable rental market, and ultimately supporting the broader economic and social fabric of our community. Supporting build-to-rent initiatives is thus essential for the city's growth and the well-being of its residents. # Considering buying a rental property in NSW? Think again

NSW Premier Chris Minns plans to ban at-will evictions of tenants. The policy is unfair on owners.

For two years NSW Premier Chris Minns has been trying to make Sydney property more affordable [<https://www.afr.com/property/residential/chris-minns-wants-sydney-to-feel-like-brooklyn-20240612-p5jl7q>].

Minns' admirable objective has just been undermined by a new policy, which he announced on Sunday, to punish investors who provide the housing used by 2 million renters across the state.

The decision to ban no-reason evictions, and extend mandatory notice periods to 90 days from 60 days, shows how easy it is for even well-intentioned policymakers to cave to populist pressure.

Some 2.2 million Australians own investment property. Most accept meagre rents, relative to the value of their homes, in the expectation the properties will increase in price.

NSW Premier Chris Minns at a Labor Party conference in Sydney on Sunday, AAP

In Sydney, the average rental return is 3 per cent, less than half the 6.3 per cent standard mortgage rate. Which is why most rental properties are negatively geared, not positively geared. Many owners subsidise renters on a cash-flow basis, including by paying steep property taxes.

Another disincentive

All property investors value reliable tenants; many choose to limit rent increases to keep them.

The NSW changes are slated to start early next year. Driven by the trope of the rapacious landlord tossing struggling tenants on to the street, they create a disincentive to invest in rental property.

Sometimes, when their costs go up, or they want to switch to short-term contracts, landlords terminate leases. This is not unethical.

Many landlords are suffering their own form of rental stress right now. Finance costs are high. Rental increases are limited to one a year.

There is a second part to the changes. Owners who use legally permitted grounds for eviction – including if they want to live in their own homes – will have to give three months' notice. In these cases, their renters can walk out, at any time, without penalty.

The asymmetrical rule is unfair on owners. They may be stuck in rental accommodation themselves, which they can't exit at short notice. Or they may be in a marriage that is ending, and need urgent access to extra accommodation.

Minns told a gathering of Labor Party members on Sunday that the policy was fair to both sides. The ACT, South Australia and Victoria have introduced similar rules.

“This will give both homeowners and renters more certainty, more peace of mind, so they can build a home and a life on surer ground,” he said.

This is not true. It gives owners less certainty by denying them access to their property, except in a narrow range of circumstances.

Property investors are an important part of Australia's housing solution [<https://www.afr.com/topic/property-investment-60v>], and help get housing built. Minns' policy is likely to convince some to invest their money in other assets.

The City makes no representation or warranty as to the currency of the standards identified, or their application on the final design of the Developer's Works. The Developer must make its own enquiries regarding whether any standard has been replaced or supplemented. In the event that an Australian Standard prescribed a different level of material, finish, work or workmanship than those contained in a City standard, then the higher of the two standards will apply. If there is a conflict between City standards then the Developer must request the City nominate the correct and applicable City standard. The City's decision as to the applicable standard is final.
